“Your Mathematical Heartprint: Sustaining Student Effort and Perseverance Every Day!”

In this inspirational message for administrators and school leaders of mathematics including coaches and department or team leaders, Dr. Kanold explores the nature of your current mathematical heartprint K-12 teachers have on students is it good or bad, and how do you know? He describes five intentional research-affirmed teaching strategies you can use every day to help your students persevere and sustain their effort in the mathematics of the lesson - unit after unit.

Dr. Kanold cautions: Be forewarned, once you listen to this message you cannot go back to old routines and practice - because you will now know better! He reveals mathematics routines worth defending for the rest of your professional and leadership life.

Outcomes:

1. Know your why for the teaching of mathematics
2. Evaluate the current reality of positive or negative impact mathematics has on your students.
3. Discover five key lesson planning and design non-negotiable activities for developing student perseverance and effort during the mathematics lesson.
